1891 – 16 Aug 1978

Cimetière Mont-Royal

Outremont, Montreal Region, Quebec,
Canada

Harry Andrews

Harry was born in Port de Grave on August 10th., 1891, to parents George and Esther Andrews of Ship Cove. In January 1903 at the young age of 11, Harry's father George passed away. George Andrews is buried in St. Luke's Anglican Cemetery Port de Grave.

Harry was attending McGill University in Montreal, and in his third year of theology studies when the first world war broke out.

Residing in Quebec, at the time, it is understandable that his enlistment on 25, April 1916, shows Montreal, P.Q. as his enlistment point. He became part of the Quebec Regiment and assigned to the 148th Overseas Battalion of the Canadian Expeditionary Force (C.E.F.)

At McGill University, young Harry was a military cadet in the Canadian Training School and a very good one according to his record. He, along with others at the university who enlisted from the cadet training school became known as the McGill University Contingent.

Harry was granted a commission to the rank of Lt on the 11th of August 1918. Only two weeks following his promotion while fighting in France, Harry was wounded. The medical reports a GSW (Gun Shot Wound) to his left shoulder but in fact he was hit by shrapnel in that same shoulder. This happened on 27th August 1918. He was hospitalized, subsequently recovered and was found fit to return to active service a short time later.

Harry survived the remainder of the war, was demobilized on 21 March 1919 in Montreal. He then returned to his studies at McGill University.

Harry shows up again in 1926 as a McGill graduate with a Bachelor of Theology degree. This link will take you to his yearbook page of 1926.

Surprisingly Harry Seems to appear again as Rector of Christ Church, Anglican Parish of Rawdon, Quebec for the period of 1954 – 1964.

Rawdon is a municipality located on the Ouareau River in southwestern Quebec, Canada, about 60 kilometres north of Montreal. It is the seat for the Regional County Municipality of Matawinie, in the Lanaudière region.

Harry Died in 1978 and is buried in Quebec, his adopted home.
